COMPANY OVERVIEW- FROM YAHOO! FINANCE

Tribune Company is a media and entertainment company. Through its subsidiaries, the Company is engaged in newspaper publishing, television and radio broadcasting and entertainment, and the development and distribution of information and entertainment through the Internet. The Company's operations are divided into three industry segments, identified according to product: publishing, broadcasting and entertainment, and interactive. These segments operate primarily in the United States.

INVESTMENT CONCLUSION

□ Sell 400 shares of TRB.

SUMMARY

- □ The stock is currently overvalued by approximately 20%: Bloomberg's DDM valuation of TRB on October 10, 2001 rendered a price of $23.79 / share. Our 2-stage model gives a current price valuation of $21.97 / share based on the following CAPM assumptions: beta of 0.6375, risk-free rate equal to the one-year T-bill, and a risk premium of 7.73%
- Along with other media companies, TRB has warned that third-quarter and full-year earnings will fall short of expectations. On September 19, the Company cited "the tough advertising market following the (September 11th) attacks."
- □ The following revenue losses were cited as being directly attributable to the terrorist attacks on America: $10MM to the newspaper group; $10MM to $12MM to the TV group; and $5MM in the third quarter for the Chicago Cubs baseball team.
- □ The near term outlook for the media industry is flat due to high costs combined with low advertising spending.

INDUSTRY INSIGHT

News & Trends

s Due to the lack of consumer spending; therefore, decreased revenues for retailers and diminishing advertising budgets, the advertising revenues for the media industry have been in a sharp downturn hurting the bottom line for media stocks.

Industry competitors have instituted cost cutting measures to maintain a level of profitability without advertising revenues. The newsprint media has reduced editions, cut pages sizes, and laid off employees. The decline in circulation seems to have reached the bottom and with aggressive pricing the media companies have been able to maintain a rise in circulation revenue.

Both newsprint and TV media will face challenges ahead following the events of September 11, 2001. They will face increased costs of attempting to cover the worldwide events as they unveil along with flat advertising revenues. These concerns may be counterbalanced by increased circulation of newsprint and a slight increase in TV advertising due to the number of people reading newspapers and watching the evening news to remain up to date on current events. The future holds promise as the economy recovers from the low points of the past year. As consumer confidence and spending increase the retailers will be looking to flood the media with advertising to attract consumers back to the store. The remaining question is, "when will this happen?"

INVESTMENT HIGHLIGHTS

| Overall Effect on Wright Fund | Currently, TRB represents 2.6% of the Wright Fund's consumer discretionary sec The stock's latest close on October 9, 2001 was just 23 cents above the stop price $30.00, and just over its 52-week low of $29.71. | | | | | |
|----------------------------------|---|--|--|--|--|--|
| | Based on our recent analysis of the consumer discretionary sector, we have recommended that the sector be equal-weight to slightly overweight in relation to the S&P 500 index. We are recommending selling our shares in TRB which is currently overvalued and faces industry uncertainty (at least in the near-term), which will cause the sector to be temporarily underweight. However, we are also making a separate recommendation to purchase shares in the Hotels, Restaurants, & Leisure industry group where we feel there are some bargains . The net effect of the buy/sell will be an equal– to slightly overweight holding versus the S&P 500. | | | | | |
| Rationale & Risks | With respect to the consumer discretionary sector as a whole, we are basically recom- mending selling an overvalued stock (TRB) with a poor near-term outlook in exchange for the purchase of a separate equity in an industry group that appears to have hit its low point and offers some growth opportunities. | | | | | |
| Recent Results & Guidance | Recent Industry Results: Long-term outlook for the newspaper (and media) industry is positive, however it is neutral for the near to intermediate future. According to Standard & Poor's, soft advertising demand and cost cutting measures will continue to characterize operations in the Publishing (newspapers) group through 2001. The thirt of Model time balance to the balance of the public operation of the balance of the balance operation. | | | | | |

- □ The Advertising & Marketing Industry Index was down 20% year to date through August 24, versus a 9.4% decline for the S&P 1500. This index fell 11.4% in 2000.
- □ Standard & Poor's predicts that the downward trend in domestic advertising spending will bottom out by the fall.
- □ In the wake of the recent economy in the media industry, firms have countered by cutting costs, improving productivity, and reducing workforces. These measures should help pull the industry out of its slump when consumer confidence improves.
