"EPA Mandatory GHG Reporting.....What's Next?"

In 2009 the US Environmental Protection Agency promulgated a new rulemaking requiring reporting of greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions by most industrial facilities. This new mandatory reporting rule (MRR) went into effect January 1, 2010, and requires reporting of 2010 emissions by March of 2011. Any site emitting over 25,000 MT/yr of CO₂e now must report. The MRR required a significant and new effort by many sites to track and report GHG emissions. Some sites were even required to install new measurement equipment. The burden so far has been heaviest on refineries.

In this presentation, a brief review of the MRR and its current impacts on industry will be discussed. New portions of the MRR that are being issued in 2010 will also be reviewed. Future plans that the EPA and Congress has for the results of the MRR will also be outlined. Finally, the multi-pronged efforts that EPA is taking to regulate GHG's and collect revenue will be briefly reviewed, along with its likely impacts on industry.
