work and reinterpreting him or her in a twentieth- or twenty-first-century text has gained popularity lately, to mention only Wide Sargasso Sea. Brintlinger does an excellent job delineating the ugly and hopeless world of Yasha’s descendants.

Chekhov was a gentle writer who eschewed posing the grand questions, preferring instead to sketch out vignettes of ordinary life. This book, published well over a hundred years after the writer’s demise, is proof that Chekhov’s seemingly lightweight stories are loaded with messages, and that these messages are being rediscovered by new generations of readers. (ET)

A book of aphorisms and reflections of the kind that one person tells another over a glass of wine. The book to read when you feel very lonely.

One of those books authors write when they signal farewell to their writing careers. Ziółkowska-Boehm is a prolific writer, and it is to be hoped that she will not quit at a relatively young age. The book is a chatty autobiography that involves Poland, the United States, and dozens of famous and not-so-famous people with whom the author maintained close or not-so-close relations. A good book to read by the fireplace, with a cup of tea in hand.

A beautifully assembled collection of Polish writings about Turkey starting with chronicler Jan Długosz (fifteenth century), through court documents, travelogues, and literary works, to the present time. The authors include such important personalities as Kallimach, Andrzej Frycz-Modrzewski, and King Jan III Sobieski. It is useful to have such a collection handy if one is a Polish ambassador to Turkey, but otherwise the effort and cost seem to be under a question mark. Do Poles really need this book? Would it not have been better to spend the considerable money involved on public relations concerning those moments in history when Polish and Turkish interests coincided, or just public relations on behalf of Poland in Turkey? It is unlikely that this Polish-language book will be read in Turkey.

SUMMER STUDY IN POLAND

The University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee announces its 2016 annual Summer Study program in Poland at the John Paul II Catholic University of Lublin. The five-week Polish language course (July 4-August 6) includes 100 hours of instruction at beginning, intermediate, and advanced levels, plus lectures of Polish culture and sightseeing. Cost estimate: $2,975 including tuition, room and board, and 5 UWM credits, plus round air trip transportation Chicago-Warsaw-Chicago. The program is open to students and the general public.

Also being offered are two, three, four, five, six, seven, and eight-week courses as well as two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight-week intensive and highly intensive courses of Polish language in July and August.

For information and application materials contact

Professor Michael J. Mikoś

Department of Foreign Languages and Literature

University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee

Milwaukee, WI 53201

(414) 229-4151 or 4949, fax (414) 229-2741
e-mail: mikos@uwm.edu